

Do you have abilities that are wasted now? Do you suspect that you could help and lead others? You—and your abilities—would be welcomed in Britain's 600,000-strong civil defence. You'd be given a chance to develop your powers, and put them to the best use possible—learning to help others who might need that help desperately.

ARE YOU USING THE BEST IN YOU?

Use it as you help others—

RESCUE They're an office worker, trained executive, bricklayer. Twice a week in their spare time they work together as a team, training to save lives. Civil Defence has brought science, skill and experience to their work.

WELFARE A field kitchen needs a bit of getting used to! In all their work, the men and women in Welfare must be capable and efficient; prepared for any emergency.

AUXILIARY FIRE SERVICE Two men bring a "Bikini" into action. She's an amazing little craft—a floating pumping unit. Modern fire-fighters are more and more mechanically-minded. Because the AFS has to be ready for tomorrow—today.

WARDEN It's not usual for the man with responsibility to be the man on the spot as well. But Wardens have to do it. These men—and women—have up-to-date equipment to help them. But personality is all important.

here in CIVIL DEFENCE

AMBULANCE AND FIRST AID The Ambulance team need skilled hands when time matters most. And they are trained to be gentle as well as quick.

ROYAL OBSERVER CORPS They're in an underground Operations Room, plotting information that comes in minute by minute from their posts. They are a vital part of our warning system. Cool heads and precision work together here.

THE COMMON BOND When you join Civil Defence you make friends. You can't help it! Because your companions see life the way you do. You'll enjoy the social side of Civil Defence.

HEADQUARTERS This is the nerve centre of Civil Defence. Here men and women control operations, and co-ordinate the efforts of all Sections. This calls for an alert mind.

You do so much, learn so much in so little time. Civil Defence need take only an hour or so a week out of your life. You will find this time rewarding. You gain skills for the vital part you'd play in any emergency. You enjoy the company of others like you, who give their time cheerfully and eagerly. You become part of one of the most successful volunteer defence forces in the world. Civil Defence is a tightly-knit, well-run force of hundreds of thousands of able and willing people—people ready to act the moment they are needed. And it is always advancing. This year, new proficiency tests and new conditions of service are being introduced. From now on members of the Civil Defence Corps and of the Auxiliary Fire Service can qualify for bounty payments. Your part—and why you should take it. Civil Defence needs men and women of every age, every kind of ability—as the pictures above show you. Look at them—and consider: Is the way you spend your spare time now as likely to bring out the best in you? Does it put the best in you to the best use? Do you believe that injured, frightened, helpless war victims ought to be helped? If this country were ever attacked with nuclear weapons, there would always be many who needed your help. This is what Civil Defence prepares you for—to give that help. To find out more, ring, or call at your nearest Civil Defence Centre. If you'd rather know more about Civil Defence before getting in touch, fill in this coupon and a booklet giving full information will be sent to you.
